J. W. ELGIN

Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co.

The main element of success in a chosen line is "sticking to your bush," as is well exemplified in the subject of this sketch, James W. Elgin, General Agent of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company of Newark, N. J. For the last twenty-one years he has confined himself strictly to life insurance, and his flourishing general agency attests his close attention to his company's interests.

He started with the company as a local agent under the old general agency of K. W. Smith & Co. of Louisville, Ky., soon being employed as district agent for the Northern district of the State, at that time comparatively undeveloped territory, in which capacity he continued when W. W. Dennis & Co. succeeded the old firm of K. W. Smith & Co.

When the business of the company reached such proportions in the State that it was impossible for one general agency to cover the entire field to advantage, the State was divided into three general agencies: The Western section under W. W. Dennis & Co. of Louisville, Ky.; the central under W. J. Cardwell, Lexington, Ky., and the Northwestern under J. W. Elgin.

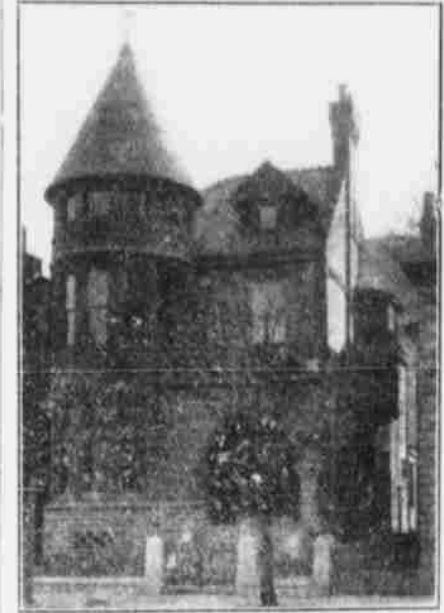

This general agency was established in April, 1907, and from its very inception has made an enviable record. A good portion of his territory lies in the rich mountainous section of Kentucky, which in the next few years will show more development and greater wealth than any other part of the State has yet experienced.

She is a graduate of the Southern College of Osteopathy, Franklin, Ky., class of 1906, and for two years thereafter practiced in South Carolina, coming to Maysville two years ago.

Osteopathy contends that the human body is a complete mechanism, containing within its tissues all the remedial forces essential and necessary to the cure of disease. Furthermore, if all the parts that go to make up the human body are in normal relation, that is, if every bone, ligament, muscle, nerve, blood-vessel, etc., are in their proper places and working order, then no such condition as disease can prevail.

It is the osteopathic conception, when disease is set up anywhere in the body, that something has occurred to arrest or block the body's life-giving and healing currents, its nervous impulses, its blood and lymph streams, and that the proper sort of treatment is to remove these obstructions. Nature's vital fluids and forces will then usually work recovery.

Osteopathy is the only system of therapeutics which pays attention to the diagnosis of hidden lesions. It is the only system which corrects such lesions and thereby puts the human machine in good mechanical order. It is advanced physics.
